

Bhutan's Export Permit for Non-Antique Artifacts

For those looking to export non-antique artifacts from Bhutan, there are specific regulations in place to safeguard the country's rich cultural heritage.

Export Permit for Non-Antique Artefacts:

- The Department of Culture in Bhutan issues export permits for non-antique cultural artifacts.
- This permit ensures that souvenirs purchased by tourists do not include items of historical or cultural significance.
- The Movable Cultural Property Act of Bhutan (2005) strictly prohibits the removal of items over 100 years old from the country.

Prohibited and Restricted Items:

- 1. Religious and Cultural Artifacts:
 - Statues, thangkas (Buddhist paintings), manuscripts, and prayer wheels over a century old cannot be exported.
 - Religious objects associated with temples and monasteries are also strictly regulated.
- 2. Sacred Objects and Ritual Items:
 - Stupas, ritual objects, amulets, and ancient Buddhist scriptures are not allowed for export.
- 3. Ornaments and Jewelry:
 - Exporting antique gold or silver ornaments of cultural value is restricted.
 - Items made from animal parts (such as ivory or bones) are completely banned.
- 4. Fossils and Archaeological Materials:
 - Exporting geological samples, fossils, and artifacts of historical interest is prohibited.
- 5. Weapons and Armor:
 - Traditional Bhutanese swords, daggers, and armor cannot be taken out of the country.

How to Obtain an Export Permit:

- If a traveler wishes to export a non-antique cultural artifact, they must apply for an Export Clearance Certificate from the Department of Culture.
- The item must be verified to ensure that it does not belong to Bhutan's cultural heritage category.
- Always purchase artifacts from authorized sellers who can provide export documentation.

General Tips for Tourists in Bhutan:

- When shopping for souvenirs, stick to government-certified handicraft stores to ensure compliance with export regulations.
- If buying religious or cultural items, check with our local tour guide for advice on whether the item can be legally exported.
- Keep all receipts and request for export clearance documents when necessary.

By following these guidelines, travelers can ensure that they respect the cultural heritage of Bhutan while avoiding any legal complications when bringing home souvenirs.
